

Thailand

(1932-)

For centuries, Thailand was the dominant power in the alaya-Indo-China region. European encroachments in the 19th century reduced this influence dramatically, although Thailand, alone among the native states of the region, was able to maintain its independence. An ally of Japan during World War II, Thailand was able to re-occupy some of its lost territories. These were given up when, in 1945, the Thai government repudiated its declaration of war against Great Britain and the U.S. After World War II, Thailand aligned itself with the West.
